Guide to Using Images Found From Online Sources

Guidelines

• The larger the image, the better. A large picture, or high-resolution image, means that the picture is clear, sharp, and all its details are visible.
• Images should support your content. Irrelevant images can be distracting and may confuse your audience.
• Be consistent with image types. Do not mix different types of images, such as photos, vectors, or clip-art.
• Finally, be aware of copyright issues. Most images found online may require permission or license to use.
